From The Examine (London), June 3.

"This book is, we believe, as to its securial character, no fiction, but the authentic story of a woman's descent into the lowest depths of degradation, as not her receivery into a pure state of fervent piety. The narrative is written with a sacred purpose, and it is by her religious fee ing that the writer has been guided safely through a strangely benest narrative that extends over the most perilous of ground. Our literature does not contain—perhaps no literature—a story of pollution told so fully, yet so utterly Whatever may be its influences, the book is a remarkable one; and its main features are too clearly authentic to escape public atten-

From The Critic (London), June 11. "It is a well written volume, and contains many powerful scenes, proving that the author is not unacquainted with the phases of life which he has undertaken to describe. We can conscientiously recommend its careful perusal."

It is proper to say that Mr. Ogden has for the last six or a years been engaged almost exclusively with Teachers and Normal Schools.

years been engaged aimest exclusively with I vachers and in Normal Schools.

From the Rev. William Russell, State Educational Lecturer, Massachusetts.

"Lancaster, Mass., September.

"Dear Sir: I have examined with care your course of icotures on the philosophy of teaching. Your plan seems to be remarkably comprehensive in the broad view of human onlitere which it presents, and at the same time faitzfully exact in the practical details of method which it presents at the same time faitzfully exact in the practical details of method which it preserbes. It seems well fitted to make intelligent and thoughtful transers of all who adopt it as a guide. The large space which it justly assigns to moral training and to healthful activity of body, as well as to intellectual exercise, commends it to the nearts of all reflecting presents not less than of teachers. The truly philosophical and thoroughly practical methods of early outtors which it suggests to the primary teacher, if faithfully acted on, would make our elementary schools werend of the most attractive and delightful, as the conditions essential to a good educator. What we meet need is a clear cludefation, and a scientific classification of the principles of education, so that they may be mastered and applied to the rearing and trisining of national and immortal beings. I need not assure you that this task you have according to my notions, most happily executed. The application of diagrams to the work seems to me to be a happy thought, addressing the subject to that most perfect of all senses the sense of sight.

interest, past or present, with the views of entinent Sataramen, the action of Congress, and the bearing of those questions upon the country at large. While the work is condensed, it is at the same time, clear in its delineation of the stript, growth, character, and countion of parties. Being strictly historical, it commends itself to men of sill shades of politics as a work of reference, and as a sate guide to the intricacies of American politics and the past action of our Gevernment.

The "old stager" will find in this book much to jog his memory very profitably—while to any one studying the national history, and to young men who look forward to the probability of entering public life, it is altogether indispensable.

PAINT, VARNISH, AND GREASY STAINS From Silks or Westens of all kines, without injuring their color texture, while leaving no unpleasant odor. It is used with the same success for CLEANING GLOVES, WITHOUT ALTERING THEIR COLOR. Also for removing grease status out of paper of all kinds.

PROPERTIES OF THE BENZINE. The Bergine is used for removing stains produced by great dies such as oil, butter, tar, wax caudle, fresh paint, and dirt ron farniture and clothes by rubbing of the bands and hair. delicate. Its amel', though not disagreeable, is rather sharp when first used, but it disappears rapidly without leaving any trace. It is unaiterable, and may be kept for years without its properties being in the least altered. The Benzine is also used for cleaning gloves, without charging the color; for washing painter's brushes (for this use it is superior to essence), for diluting all colors and for alting out stains on paper. The Bequine is percape the only preparation used with success for removing greaty gravings, drawings, plans, and all kinds of papers, books, and allon allk ribbons of all colors, which makes it look equal to new.

MODE OF USING THE BENZINE. First, a piece of linen folded several times is to be placed upon a table; it will serve as a sponge in absorbing the Bentine containing the greasy matter, or any other forming the stain; then the stain part of the cloth well stretched is to be placed upon this inen, after seeing that no dust remains upon it. Afterward, fine lines, or paper not sized. It is neces of the stained part, in order to take it off more easy.

The following precentions are to be attended to: The stain is to be rubbed with cotton a aked with Senzine, describing eirsum. Then it is to be wiped till it becomes nearly dry. When the stain is taken off, expose the of the to open air, or place it in a draft. After half a day the smell of the Benzine will disappear

FOR CLEANING GLOVES.

This little operation is done easily and quickly.

Place the duty glove, stretched as much as possible, upon 6 clean paper; then pass over it a small piece of fine lines estarated with Benzine, the greasy matter soiling the glove will disappear immediately. Expose it afterward to the open air.

It would be much more convenient to have a fine

Place the greasy part of the engraving, or even the whole en-Place the greasy part of the engraving, or even in whose signature, upon filtering paper folded; then dip a piece of cottons wool in the Benzine and put it upon the stain, on the back of the engraving, where it will be necessary to keep it for several minutes; take it off and dry the place quickly with filtering paper. Change the paper that is under the engraving to a new piece. Then dip another piece of cotton in the Senzine, and pass is lightly over the stain, from the center to the extreme parts, taking care to form circumferences, in order to dissolve the shade and avoid ring marks. This operation must be done quickly, as the Benzine is very volatile.

However, if after the complete evaporation of the Benzine. which takes place in a quarter of an hour, the stain appears again then the operation is to be repeated another time.

It is of importance to know that the Benzine is a neutral body, having no action whatever on any kind of tissues or colors.

It only discoves wax and greaty bodies; there is no danger, therefore, to have it in contact with papers of any kind, whatever may be their value. Like turpentine, &c., it is inflammable, and must be kept away
